Ten artists serve Artscape attendees during the festival while transforming the parking garage across from the Charles Theater into an environment of inquiry. For example, look to buy fake food in the nearby food court, or notice signs on lamp posts that ask burning questions such as "So, what is it like being you?"; a phone number will let you call your answers in. Anywhere in the festival you might also take a survey from someone wearing a Services United t-shirt and receive a free service such as a pat on the back, or if you prefer you may be walked to the nearest water station or toilet.

Other projects include highlighting utility works in the garage, planting a tree, making a doll or having an article of clothing washed and hung to dry. Receive a free service, or just celebrate labor! Station North Works: A Full Service Garage is curated by Lisa Moren and organized Kathryn Williamson of the Department of Visual Arts at, UMBC.

Maryland Morning with Tom Hall interview with Lisa Moren and James Meyhew aired on WYPR, July 8, 2008.
